A Study of Translations of Two-part Allegorical Sayings in Hong Lou Meng

A thesis submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Master of Arts in Translation Studies

by LOU MENGJIN, AMY

Supervisor: James LI JIAN

University of Macau
April 2011
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table of Contents.........................................................................................................i
Declaration....................................................................................................................iii
Acknowledgements......................................................................................................iv
Abstract.......................................................................................................................v
List of Abbreviations.....................................................................................................vi
List of Tables and Figures.............................................................................................vii

1. INTRODUCTION.................................................................................................1
   1.1 Background of the Study......................................................................................1
   1.2 Aims and Objective.............................................................................................4
   1.3 Expected Findings and Significance of this Study.............................................4
   1.4 Organization of the thesis...................................................................................5

2. LITERATURE REVIEW......................................................................................6
   2.1 Previous Studies on Categorization of TPAs.....................................................6
   2.2 Domestication and Foreignization: Two Translation Strategies Used to translate TPAs in HLM.................................................................................9
   2.3 Previous Studies on Translation methods.........................................................11
      2.3.1 Translation Methods in Loh’s Shift Model...............................................11
      2.3.2 Specification...............................................................................................13
      2.3.3 Paraphrase..................................................................................................13
      2.3.4 Cultural substitution....................................................................................14
2.4 Previous Studies on HLM and Its Translations.................................14
2.5 Summary..................................................................................15

3. METHODOLOGY.............................................................................17
3.1 Data...........................................................................................17
3.2 Research Procedure.................................................................18

4. CASE ANALYSIS............................................................................20
4.1 Figurative – semi-figurative.........................................................20
4.2 Figurative – Full figurative.........................................................22
4.3 Associative type – Literal.............................................................24
4.4 Associative type – double interpretational - using homophony......26
4.5 Associative type – double interpretational - using polysemy...........28

5. FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION.........................................................30
5.1 Findings....................................................................................30
5.2 Discussion.................................................................................31

6. CONCLUSION..................................................................................35

BIBLIOGRAPHY..................................................................................38

APPENDIX..........................................................................................41
DECLARATION

The work presented in this thesis is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, original and my own, except as acknowledged in the text, and has not been submitted, either in whole or part, for a degree at this or any other university.

LUO MENGJIN
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This thesis would not have been finished without the help and support of many people who are gratefully acknowledged here.

At the very first, I owe my deepest gratitude to my supervisor, Dr. James Li Jian, whose encouragement, guidance and support from the initial to the final level has enabled me to finish this thesis. He has made available his support in a number of ways such as email and face-to-face discussion. He has offered me invaluable ideas, suggestions and criticisms with his profound knowledge and research experience.

I am also extremely grateful to Prof. Zhang Meifang, whose patience, guidance and valuable suggestions are indispensable to the completion of this thesis. She enlightened me in picking up the topic of the current thesis and offered her suggestions when I was stuck in writing it.

I would also like to express my sincere thanks to Dr. Victoria Lei who offers careful examination of this thesis. Without her constructive suggestions and help, this thesis would not have been improved.

I shall also extend my thanks to all faculty members of Translation Studies, who have been teaching me translation theories in the past two years. Special thanks would go to Prof. ZHANG Meifang, Dr. Hari VENKATESAN, Dr. James Li, Dr. Victoria Lei, and Dr. Vincent Wang.

Thanks also go to my postgraduate friends, Tina Pan Hanting and Susie Shen Jin, who were willing to discuss with me when I had some questions in mind.

Lastly, I would like to offer my regards and blessings to all of those who supported me in any respect during the completion of this study.
ABSTRACT

Two-part allegorical saying is a Chinese culture-specific linguistic phenomenon. Cao Xueqin blends many two-part allegorical sayings in his Hong Lou Meng. In the latter part of the last century, two full English translations of Hong Lou Meng came into being, which are Yang Xianyi & Gladys Yang’s A Dream of Red Mansions and David Hawkes & John Minford’s The Story of the Stone. Since then, many studies regarding these two translations have been carried out. Previous studies suggest that Yang tends to use foreignization while Hawkes tends to use domestication. This thesis aims at finding out whether the Yangs and Hawkes demonstrate such tendencies in handling the two-part allegorical sayings in Hong Lou Meng. After analyzing every rendering of two-part allegorical saying and counting the number of times various translation strategies and methods are used, this study finds that the Yangs and Hawkes, instead of adhering to foreignization and domestication respectively, actually adopt similar translation strategies and methods in translating the two-part allegorical sayings in Hong Lou Meng.

Keywords: two-part allegorical saying, domestication, foreignization, translation methods
List of Abbreviations

HLM: Hong Lou Meng:

TPA: Two-part Allegorical Saying
List of Tables and Figures

Table 1. Loh’s Shift Model (1958) ..............................................................13
Table 2. Vinay & Darbelnet’s Model (1958).............................................16
Table 3. Brief Information about Nine English Versions of HLM.............18
Table 4. Frequencies of Translation Strategies Used to Translate TPAs in HLM..........................................................30
Table 5. Frequencies of Translation Methods Used to Translate TPAs in HLM..........................................................31
Figure 1. Frequencies of Translation Strategies Used..............................35
Figure 2. Frequencies of Translation Methods Used..............................36